

SAAS

SPONSOR AN AFRICAN SCHOLAR

KELVIN

Kelvin is 23 years old. He is currently studying telecommunications and hopes to finish his course in December 2024. Kelvin is an ambitious young man who enjoys studying, despite the financial challenges his family faces and the pressure to succeed.

Kelvin is the third child in a family of four: one girl and three boys. All the kids stay with both of their parents. Kelvin's dad is the only one who works. He is a part-time plumber, while his mother is a housewife.

They all stayed in a rented Swahili house with two rooms. It has electricity but no running water. His dad's monthly income is around 100 euros, which is divided between paying rent and buying basic needs for the family.

With this low income, his dad can not afford to fully support his children in school. Kelvin's siblings were lucky to receive support from the SAAS organization, a non-profit that provides financial aid to students from low-income families. This support has been instrumental in their educational journey.

Kelvin is filled with gratitude and joy since he also received assistance from the SAAS organization. This support has paved the way for him to pursue his dream of becoming a telecommunication engineer.

Kelvin's passion for learning extends beyond the classroom. He finds joy in playing football and participating in social activities like charity walks. His enthusiasm is equally evident in his favorite subjects, mathematics and languages, which he pursues with great zeal.
